ITEM

Namayumba Technical Institute recently replaced 20 old computers, several dead printers, and broken monitors with new equipment donated by a partner organisation. The old, obsolete equipment has been dumped in a store room, and some parts have started leaking chemicals, while other pieces have been thrown into a nearby pit for burning by the support staff.

The Institute Director has learnt that this could be harmful and has asked the ICT department to advise on how to handle this old electronic equipment (e-waste) properly.

Task:

- a) Explain the dangers/risks of the way the Institute has been disposing of its old computers and other electronic equipment.
- b) Advise the Institute on the proper ways of managing and disposing of e-waste.
